How does it work? If you are a Windows desktop user, you may often find yourself entering a user account/password combination for a PC when starting it. This makes your computer secure, but it is also a hassle for users that use to log on to a PC with a pre-specified password. They need to remember a different password for each account and they may forget one of the passwords. Many users simply wish to avoid typing a username or password when starting Windows. Autologon is the process by which Windows remembers the login to your computer after you have logged off. Whenever you log into Windows, you will automatically log into the user you specified when you installed Windows. You do not need to remember a password. A must have for users who wish to save time and hassle. For computers which have a traditional BIOS user interface (BIOS) that is not user serviceable and do not have a built in hard drive password, the Windows password can be set to autologon, and Windows will automatically log in as the specified user. AutoLogon.com is proud to announce the release of Auto Logon Tool Product Key 1.1. This update includes bug fixes as well as enhancements related to the program's functionality. Auto Logon Tool (ALT) is a free, Windows based tool which is designed to help you automate the Windows logon process. Besides providing a graphical interface for customization of the user's personal settings, ALT is able to detect whether the Windows login is provided by a password, by using autologon (Windows 7 and onwards) or by being forced to log on via a group policy setting. The program also allows you to set a backup password for your user account, enter the group policy settings, set a password for your computer and disable or enable autologon for that user. It is an easy to use program designed to help you to automate the Windows Logon process. Downloading: After downloading and installing the program, follow the instructions to complete the installation. Requirements: A BIOS (I think I only have it on Windows XP and for Windows 7) Username and Password information for the default user (Without this information the program won't work. Please read the Readme file for more information on this.) Version 1.1 Release Notes The default password has been changed from "admin" to "admin", and the login setup has been updated.
