Gallos travelled to the court of the Ostrogoths in Italy, and requested to be made bishop of Benevento, which was granted on condition that he should renounce his monk's habit, and should be consecrated with an episcopal ring. Gallos accepted, but his habit never changed. He died after the death of Theodoric the Great (in 483). His hymns are the same as those of Palladius; there is none, however, by Gallos alone. He is probably identical with the Gallus, cited by John of Antiochus as a "catholic bishop of Dalmatia", who was numbered among the fathers of the (reformed) Greek church.
