I don't see why this can't be done. What type are you comparing to and what is the difference you're looking to see? I'm pretty sure there's a software tool for this - would have a look.. I've only ever needed to use them with Excel, and I would have thought they'd work fine on a Mac like the OP in some way (probably not so good on a PC). A: You can use  $\log_{10}()$  or  $\log_{10f}()$  or  $\exp(\log_{10}(x))$  where  $x$  is an array. You might need to cast the float to an int. You can use MATLAB, or even Excel. "a person, state or country that is subject of a colony, dominion or protectorate" Said Syed Ahmad Khan, 7th of 'Amin-al-Madinah, the founder of modern Pakistan. By SHAHEERA ALI AKBAR A recent study conducted by the Pakistan Supreme Court shows that a family of one of the country's most influential politicians, Malik Rashid, controls nearly 6% of Pakistan's share in international cricketer Imran Khan's deal with the Indian Bollywood actor and sports mogul Shahrukh Khan. The study also shows that the Rashid family's net worth in the Pakistani economy is estimated to be over US\$6.2 billion, with the share of this net worth in the shares of the Mustafa Corporation, one of the major media corporations in Pakistan, reaching 95%. The Supreme Court study, however, raises questions over the validity of the personal wealth statements in the forms of annual financial statements required by the Supreme Court for anyone wanting to be appointed as a governor or the equivalent positions. The study also questions the validity of the wealth statements of the Pakistani Cricketers Association (PCA), the body which is responsible for representing Pakistani cricketers in bilateral cricket tours with India. Consequently, the Supreme Court has been asked to review the statements, as these statements are to be verified with existing financial statements and other materials by the Federal Board of Revenue (FBR). FBR is the finance ministry's independent financial institution charged with the collection of taxes and performance of financial audits and economic assessments of enterprises.

A small boat drifts in from the bay at night on a dark and moonless night. It is not full of merriment and laughter, but when we open the boat hatch we do see that the captain is reading comic books. Gardenia trees lean languidly over the little boat and the air is heavy with the sweet, cloying smell of their flowers. With the cooling night breeze the little boat moves slowly in the calm water. The captain is an older man and he is looking at the water. The boat wakes with a huff and its bow rises a little way and the hull makes a gentle thumping sound. "Sit tight, dearie. The ship is coming in..." A boat that is close to the shore catches our attention. We can just see the boat's lights, they catch the soft glow of the stars. The boat's lanterns are turning green, then yellow, then orange before fading away. In the distance we can hear a faint rumble of the sea rising and swelling. "But they are coming, the fish." says the Captain. He leans back and resumes his book. The dock trembles, the wooden slats shift and shake
