The creators of Minecraft build a gaming world that any developer can incorporate their game into. Roblox allows players to build their dream from the ground up, creating games completely customized to their audience. The game features a free, single player mode. The creators have also made a mode called Adventure mode which is free for children aged 5 to 12, whilst the business mode is $9.99 and only available for children aged 13 and up. The creators have also made smaller game mode such as the game music player where users can listen to the music that was made for games created by other users. In Roblox, users can design their own games from scratch by assembling tiles that form the game environment. Robux is used as in-game currency to purchase design and editing tools or to unlock new content. The creators sell "content packs" that contain items or areas. Each "content pack" can be unlocked for Robux and the cost of content packs varies depending on the type of content. Content packs are sold at $2.99, but the creators also sell "premium content" packs for over $5. Roblox is built on the CryEngine 3 Game development platform and is officially licensed by the Crytek GmbH which has led to speculation that it will end up in the next Crysis game release, Crysis 4. In 2019, Roblox announced that they had acquired the rights from Electronic Arts and Crytek to license their software.
